OHIO LEGISLATURE IS NOW IN SESSION

MANY IMPORTANT PROBLEMS SUBMITTED FOR SOLUTION

Hopes for a Short Session Are Held Out by Members of Both Branches—Lieutenant Governor Bloom Will Preside Over Senate Until Inauguration Day When Charles H. Lewis is Inducted Into Office

Despite frantic appeals on the part of the Democrats to elect a legislature in harmony with the governor and equally frantic appeals on the part of the Republicans to elect a governor in harmony with the legislature, the general assembly met today with 110 Republicans and twenty Democrats in the house of representatives and with 33 Republicans and only two Democrats in the senate; while on next Monday Governor Vic Donahey will be inaugurated for a second time having been reelected by the unprecedented majority of nearly 200,000 votes.

Secretary of State Thad H. Brown called the house of representatives to order and Lieutenant Governor Earl D. Bloom officiated in a like manner in the senate. Mr. Brown was succeeded as presiding officer by Harry D. Silver immediately after the first action of the house and then the remainder of the officials named at the caucus were elected.

Lieutenant Governor Bloom will preside over the senate until after the inauguration, January 12, at which time the newly elected lieutenant governor, Charles H. Lewis, will preside.

Chief Justice Carrington T. Marshall will swear in the house members, and Associate Justice Robert H. Day, of the supreme court, will administer the oath to the senate members. After preliminary organization, the house expects to get down to the introduction of bills.

The usual hopes for a short session have been held out by various members of the house and senate and Speaker Silver has indicated that he will speed things up as much as possible. He is responsible for the house order to proceed with business on the first day of the session. The senate officials have announced, however, that they will not introduce any bills until after inauguration day. The longevity of the session depends to a great extent upon how well the legislators and Governor Donahey get along with the various issues that will bob up from time to time.

This session of the legislature promises to be one of the most important ever held in Ohio, because an unusual number of problems of vital interest are to be submitted for solution of the lawmakers. Among the many questions to be passed upon are the following, all of great import:

Ratification of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution.

Taxation—with its perplexing problems of financial relief for poverty stricken cities and for the schools faced with closing because of limited finances.

A gasoline tax—a measure bitterly fought in the last legislature and defeated, but which has been proposed again with renewed vigor.

Licensing of motor vehicle drivers—proposed by the state automobile associations.

Amendments to the Freeman-Collister motor bus act—a present law which is said to be fraught with many bad points and causing a congestion in the state public utilities commission's hearing docket.

Revision of the state highway system—a measure proposed by Highway Director L. A. Boulay, to provide main thoroughfares between large cities.

Establishment of a rural highway police system—another highway department measure which will bring with it a renewal of the old fight for a state constabulary patterned after the Pennsylvania and New York state police organizations.

Revision of the present auto license laws to permit the charging of fees for distribution of tags, carrying with it a counter proposal to have the tags distributed thru the regular taxing channels of each county.

Pre-primary conventions for the endorsement of candidates for state office—a measure to which the Republican party in Ohio has pledged its support in its campaign platform of the past November campaign.

A proposed $47,000,000 highway program offered by the state highway department for the next biennium.

Revision of the Davis reorganization measure to restore the old bipartisan board of administration to control the state department of welfare.

An anglers' license bill—requested by the sportsmen of Ohio to provide additional revenue for the expansion of the state's fish hatcheries and game preserves.

ROBERT D. CAREY

Robert D. Carey of Careyhurst, Wyo., was named by President Coolidge as chairman of the farm commission to devise immediate relief for the farmers of the country. Mr. Carey is a former governor of Wyoming. He is president of the Wyoming Stock Growers' association and chairman of the Wyoming state highway commission. In 1922 he was a member of the national agricultural conference held in Washington.

WET FORCES LOOKING FOR A GO-GETTER

Raising a Million Dollar Fund for Modification and Eventual Repeal of Volstead Act.

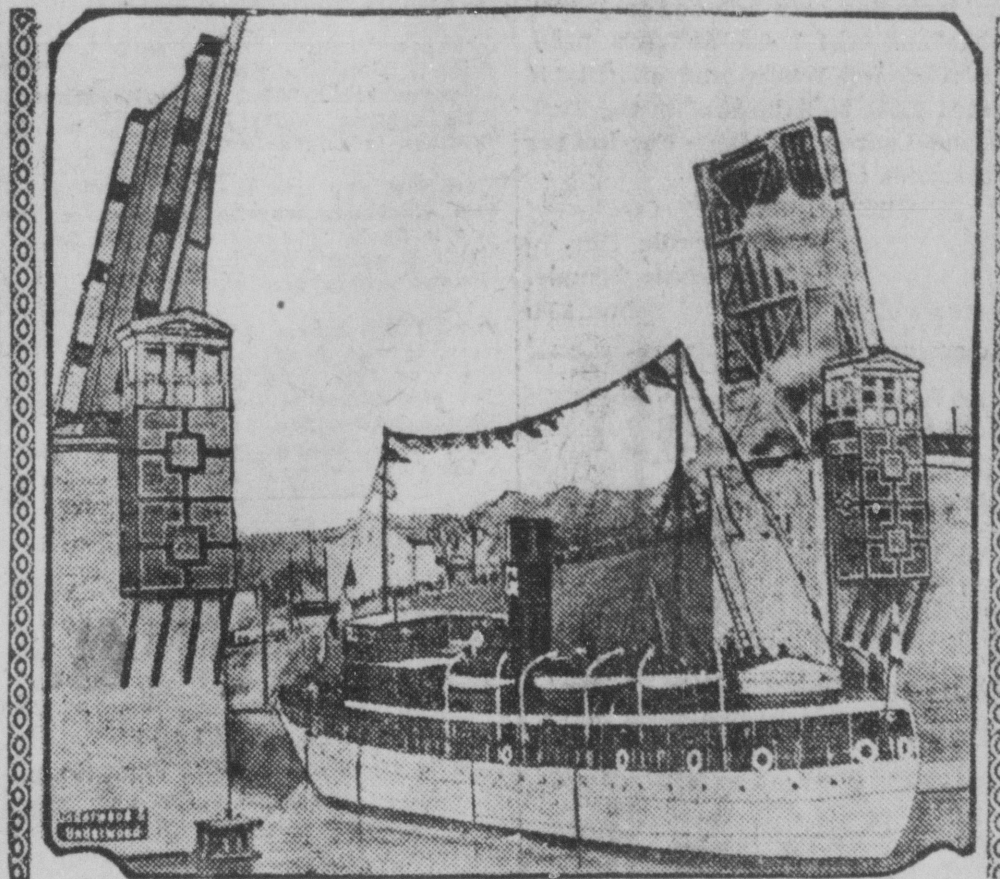

Anti-prohibitionists are on a still search for a wet Wayne B. Wheeler. They are raising a fund if $1,000,000 for the purpose of obtaining a beer and wine amendment to the Volstead act and, eventually, the repeal of that drastic measure. But to spend it wisely, effectively and with the best possible promise of success, they want a man with something of the same energy, zeal, organizing ability and genius for publicity as Wheeler.

Wheeler, for the past 10 years, has been national counsel and legislative superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America. Before that he was Ohio superintendent of that organization. He is credited with the adoption of the eighteenth amendment and enactment of the Volstead law.

Wheeler's modest salary is about $7500 a year, the same legal stipend as that allotted members of congress. Measured in the value of his service to the prohibition cause, however, his salary should be somewhere between $75,000 and $750,000 a year. He is worth a whole regiment of ordinary dry workers.

AMBASSADORS APPOINTED BY COOLIDGE

Kellogg and Herrick to Succeed Themselves—James A. Logan Named as Observer.

(United Press.)

Appointment of Ambassador Kellogg at London, Ambassador Herrick, at Paris and Col. James A. Logan, unofficial observer of the reparations commission as the American representatives to the Paris financial conference January 6, was announced at the state department at Washington Saturday.

The inclusion of Kellogg as one of this country's representatives was interpreted here as meaning this government will use the London-Dawes agreement as a confirmation of its right to collect $250,000,000 of American war claims from the reparations fund.

RECORD CROWD AT EAGLES SHOW

The big crowd that attended the Eagles circus Saturday night from all reports was the largest attendance ever recorded at Memorial hall which goes to prove that the popular attraction put on by the Eagle lodge is satisfying the public. Many patrons were there early and by 8:30 when the big circus got under way the gallery as well as the main floor at Memorial hall was packed to the doors. The door prize, a beautiful hat box and overnight traveling bag and the dance prize an ivory manicure set in case, were won by Circleville people. The prizes given away each night are attracting large crowds. Don't forget the date, January 1 to 10 each night at Memorial hall, Eagles circus.

THE ALLENS INJURED.

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Allen, of South Scioto street, while returning home in the auto from a trip to Washington C. H., last Thursday evening sustained serious injuries when the car they were riding in skidded and upset, five miles east of Williamsport on the Williamsport pike. Mr. Allen's face and Mrs. Allen's arms and ankles were cut by flying pieces of broken glass.

LIVE POULTRY SHIPMENTS.

E. W. Newton, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, arrived home Saturday on an enforced vacation. The embargo on the shipment of live poultry out of this state has put a quietus on the poultry business in Pittsburg. It is Mr. Newton's intention if he can secure a location to open a poultry warehouse and dress poultry for the eastern market and in this way get around the embargo.

James McLaughlin, George Metzger, Joseph Metzger and J. L. Chilcote were business visitors in Columbus today.

CIRCLEVILLE WOMAN HEIR TO PROPERTY

Mrs. Claud Ater Claims Father and Mother Separated When She Was Infant.

A quest of years for her father was disclosed in probate court recently when Mrs. Mabel Williamson Ater, of Circleville, gave evidence in her claim for a share in the estate of the late Sarah Gorsuch. She says that she is the daughter of Alonzo Williamson, one of the direct heirs, but that her father and mother separated when she was infant and she never knew him. Her mother refused all information about him and it was only after her death that she sought details of his life and information as to his whereabouts. She said she heard from him thru a friend who saw him in St. Louis and later in Texas. No record of the birth of Mrs. Ater was introduced.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Mrs. Ater is the wife of Deputy County Treasurer Claud Ater, of this city.

INVALID CAR SERVICE.

Mrs. Barton Williams, Deer Creek township, was removed to Chillicothe hospital this morning in the C. E. Hill invalid car, where she will undergo treatment.

ROTARIANS

And Other Boosters Draw Hearty O. K. From George Ade.

Babbitts and other boosters who have been the targets for various and sundry jibes in the last few years, now have a powerful ally. George Ade, in the course of an article looking back over the first quarter of the twentieth century in this week's issue of Liberty magazine, takes occasion to defend them as one of the most significant forces in modern civilization.

"There seems to be a disposition just now among soft-collared high-brows to scoff at all the Babbitts and boosters, the Rotarians, Kiwanises, and others who wear badges and attend luncheons," he says.

"Lay off of the boys; Their work has to be snappy, for they are engaged in raising the dead. They are the hard-breathing hustlers and open beautiful parks and clean up neglected streets and organize symphony orchestras. Every one of them is a soldier in a good cause, working for the material prosperity and the outward splendor of his own town."

"He is a new type, developed in this quarter century. It is all right for the novelists to make fun of him but for goodness sake, don't head him off or slow him down. Feed him a new slogan every day and let him go to it."

OHIO SWEET CORN PACK SHOWS BIG DROP

Only Three States in the Country Show Increased Packs Over Those of 1923.

The sweet corn pack of Ohio for 1924 is 600,000 cases under that of last year, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The total pack this year is 787,000 cases as compared to 1,390,000 cases the year before, while the 1922 pack was somewhat more than a million cases, the Foundation states.

The sweet corn in this state finds its counterpart in the national pack for the year. Total production in 1924 was over twelve million cases as compared with the fourteen million cases of the year before. This year's production, however, is about a million cases above the pack of a million cases above the pack of 1922. The violent fluctuation from year to year has been characteristic of the corn industry, so that the 15,000,000 cases which were produced in 1920 dropped the very next year to scarcely half that figure. Although 14 million cases were produced as far back as 1911, two years later found that production cut into two, with the result that steady prices would be impossible but for common practice of carrying heavy stocks over from one season to the next.

The fluctuation in production is not only shown in the country as a whole but individual states fluctuate sharply in opposite directions the same year, the figures compiled by the Foundation show. Ohio cannot only about half as much corn this year as last, while Maine increased her output about one-third. Maine, New York and Minnesota were the only states to show material increases this year, Iowa, Illinois and Maryland dropping off 20 to 25 per cent each while still dividing honors fairly evenly for leading place.

SERIOUSLY INJURED

Roy, the sixteen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Lemley, of Circleville township, was badly injured Sunday morning, when the auto he was driving struck a rock in the road and he was thrown thru the windshield. His nose was broken and he also received a deep cut in his chin. Dr. Allen dressed the wounds.

BLIZZARD HITS EAST SATURDAY

Eleven Inch Fall of the Beautiful in New York City—Heaviest Snow of Season.

(United Press.)

Snowed in under the first severe fall of winter, the east Saturday suffered fire fatalities in Philadelphia, Toledo and Montreal, where a total of 12 persons were burned to death.

Ten of the fire victims were children. Two hundred families were driven from their homes by a serious Philadelphia fire in which a hoseman was killed.

In New York a series of fires drove 100 persons to streets, while snow hampered firemen.

Passengers and crew of the Clyde liner Mohawk, which burned and was scuttled in Delaware Bay Friday, were either enroute to Florida, the vessel's destination, or back at their homes Saturday. The Mohawk was feared to be a total loss.

The most inconvenience caused by the storm which blanketed eastern cities began to materialize Saturday with rain turning an average twelve inch fall to slush. In parts of the east it remained severely cold Saturday night, two persons freezing to death near Philadelphia.

POLICE COURT.

On a search warrant sworn out by Officer William McCrady, the home of William Fowler Brungs on South Canal street was raided Saturday afternoon by Chief of Police Warner assisted by Officers McCrady and Fitzpatrick. The following persons were brought in; William Brungs, William Fowler, Walter Thacker, Charles Thomas, Woody Thomas, of this city and Theodore Thompson, of Chillicothe. The first two were charged with illegal possession of liquor and were given a fine of $100 and costs. And the four last named were slated drunk and disorderly and were given a fine of ten dollars and costs. The prisoners paid the fine and costs assessed against them and were released.

LUTHERAN LEAGUERS ENTERTAIN

Lunch Served Was Composed of Heinz's Products—Negative Won in Debate.

The Lutheran congregation was entertained by the Luther league Wednesday evening, December 31, following the church service, when over two hundred members were present. Mr. McMasters, a representative of the H. J. Heinz Co., gave an illustrated talk on the 57 varieties, which was very much enjoyed by all. After his talk Mr. McMasters with the aid of several young men of the league, prepared and served a lunch composed of Heinz products. Following the supper, a program was given by members of the league consisting of music and a debate on the subject; "Resolved, that Women do More for the Church and Christ than Men." Although the three young men on the negative side received all three votes, they have not yet convinced the three young ladies of the affirmative. While the bells were ringing, everyone joined in the prayer and singing of the doxology. The evening was declared a great success.

Elevator Cage an Arbor
After a busy life in a Kansas City (Kan.) office building, an elevator cage has been given a home on the lawn of Arthur Baker. It still shows what it is, but next summer a new gown of green leaves will obliterate all traces of its life of ups and downs, and it will be a full-fledged arbor. Vines which are expected to cover it already are started.

Ministerial Family
For almost 150 years the family of Rev. Frederick Seely Porter, pastor of the Trinity Baptist church of Oklahoma City, has not been without a minister of the Baptist denomination. On both his mother's and his father's side were pioneer ministers who went into Canada from the United States in 1777 and there laid the foundation of a family of preachers and Bible teachers. Mr. Porter reached his present charge from New Brunswick, Canada, last February. Formerly he was secretary of the British and Foreign Bible society in Newfoundland and the Maritime provinces. After eight years spent in preparing himself for the ministry he received a commission as captain in the Canadian overseas forces and spent 39 months as chaplain at the front. He was promoted to major soon after he crossed.

Had Had His Fling
Ted's mother has given him an allowance of ten cents a week, but she has tried to encourage him to save some of it as a matter of training. Last Saturday she asked him how much he had left. He looked rather chagrined at first and then finally confessed that he had spent it all. His mother appeared sorrowful, until Ted added with enthusiasm: "But, say, I sure have lived like a prince for once."

"Home, a Fire, and You"
It was late when she came tonight. The table had long been spread. The candles had burned half down.
I went to the open door—
The street was empty, to me.
So I sat me down to wait.
And I was cold, so cold—
Filled with a nameless fear.
Just for a moment, there,
I was weak with terror and dread.
Suppose, I said, suppose—
Oh, then the clank of the gate.
The blessed rush of her feet!
The door—the door snapped to,
She gathered me in her arms,
Straight and sudden and strong,
Laughing, laughing and gay,
And scolding me for my fears.
"We are getting so busy!" she said.
"I wish—I wish you could see
The work I finished today!
Is supper ready? Of course!
Mind if I light a fire—
A warm, bright fire on the hearth?
It is getting colder tonight.
Summer is almost gone."
Kneeling, she laid the spark
And kindled a leaping flame.
And a flame in her face leaped, too,
"Isn't it good?" she said.
"Home, and a fire, and you!"
—Barbara Young in the New York Times.
Now, I am warm, so warm,
Here is the heart of my heart.
She was late, and I was afraid,
But she came, at last! And she said,
"Home, and a fire, and you!"
—Barbara Young in the New York Times.

Mexicans Use Maguey Plant to Obtain Ice
Durango City, capital of the state of the same name in Mexico, which hovers on the border line of the Torrid zone, provides itself with one of the most peculiarly manufactured ice supplies in the world. When the maguey, or century plant, has had the seven years' growth necessary to bloom and its bud has been tapped for pulque, in most places it is destroyed. At Durango, however, all the plants are assembled in one place, where the leaves are laid out with the cupping surfaces upward on the ground. Into each leaf is poured about two quarts of water. Although the temperature is not low enough to freeze water in the canals or when it is placed in some domestic utensil, it does freeze in the maguey leaves. The ice is gathered in the early morning and put into the ice houses, built of adobe about 20 feet square and 20 feet deep. The ice is thrown in through an opening in the roof and the slivers melt together, forming a solid mass. Later it is cut out and delivered to the housewives.—Grit.

Bees in Odd Hive
The school clock tower at Micheldever Hants, England, is for some reason a favorite dwelling place for bees. For at least 30 years swarms of bees have made the tower their home, and although from time to time they have been killed, the place carefully disinfected, and the hole they have made in the clock face filled with cement, a fresh swarm has always come every year and eaten through the cement to the old spot. Last year, they swarmed on the window of the house opposite, and made their way inside the wall through some old woodwork. They were removed in the autumn, and this place also was cemented, but a new lot of bees have arrived and taken up the same position as the old ones. A bucketful of honey was taken from the house wall, and the honey found in the clock tower the last time it was cleared amounted to some hundredweights.

Before and After
An Irvington boy came home from school the first day of the term, rejoicing because he had been assigned to the room of his favorite teacher, a young woman who had been married during the summer vacation.
A few days later he had changed his mind completely and wished for another teacher.
"What's the matter?" asked his mother. "I thought she was the one you liked so well."
"She was," the boy said, "but she must have got an awful husband because she's as cross as a bear now."

Ensemble Costume
New Fashion Rage

Idea Is Carried Out in All Kinds of Clothes, Also in Jewelry.

Fashion has gone mad over the ensemble costume. We find it not only in sports and formal models, but even winding its way into the boudoir, says a fashion writer in the Washington Evening Star. One of the shops is showing a three-piece affair in a negligee which is charming. It consists of pajamas of Chinese blue crepe de chine, bordered and sashed in black crepe-back satin, and a matching breakfast coat of the black satin, banded in blue silk, wadded.

The ensemble idea is even carried out in jewelry, and no one would think of wearing necklaces, bracelets or earrings that did not distinctly harmonize with each other and with the costume which they adorn.

One of the most striking exponents of the ensemble modes is a distinguished importation from Molyneux of Paris and is executed in a combination of crepe materials. The dress is of a handsome crinkled and stitched printed silk, woven especially for this model in shades of cream, black and henna. Of black wool crepe, the coat is built on straight lines, with a straight cape attached to the back, and luxurious collar and cuffs of fox. But the most intriguing detail of all is the crepe de chine lining, the upper part of which is in rose color, the lower in apple green, with a band of the printed silk to define the two.

In the sports type there is a dashing model from Patou in a soft sand-colored wool. The dress is sleeveless, and the coat, seven-eighths in length, is banded in wool of a deeper shade of tan, with a scarf to match.

There are also domestic models, in the lovely new autumn shades, fur-trimmed or with braiding.

Many of the coat dresses which are so liked this season, are made to give the appearance of a three-piece suit. A very handsome imported model is especially of this type. The material used is a deep green twill, the ribs of which are at varying widths to stamp its newness. It is banded in gray squirrel at the cuffs and rever, and about the skirt to give the line which the coat would have. It is a very practical dress, being appropriate indoors or out.

Simplicity is the keynote of another coat dress in imported tan wool. Straight of line and unbelted, it is trimmed only in a row of buttons fastening all the way down the front. Tailored severely in masculine style, it may be worn with a narrow rolled collar to give the feminine touch at the throat.

Attractive coat dresses are also shown in the bengaline variety of silks, with revers of Irish lace, or with touches of color in the trimming.

Giving Long Lines.

For the "watch-your-weight" ladies, dresses have been designed which are not only cut in large sizes, but have fullness introduced in the desirable places to lessen breadth and give long lines. Such a model is to be had in a navy twill coat dress, closing with a self-material sash at the side, and with a flattering rever faced in penny bronze crepe de chine. It has bands of striped silk braid down the front and on the cuffs and there is a little fullness at the hips. With such models from which to choose, the slightly overweight matron should find no difficulty in looking as slender and smart as her eighteen-year-old daughter. There is such an art in designing clothes to enhance magnificent dignity, and some of the best shops make a specialty of catering to this type. It is no longer necessary to try to lace yourself into a dress two sizes too small or to go to the bother and uncertainty of having them made because you "simply can't find your size."

Hats have never been smarter! The favored shapes are the small square crowned, turned-up-brim types, to be worn with tailored clothes and the "rushed velvet shapes for more formal occasions. Black felt is very good and extremely practical, as it will harmonize with innumerable costumes. A charming hat of this sort has a square crown of black felt, and the brim, turned up becomingly in front, is faced with black satin.

A hat of similar shape is developed of tan velvet with a plaited band of tan georgette about the crown, ending in loops at the side. An ornament of metal is placed to the left of the front, beautifully finishing this very smart model.

The Venetian type of hat, flaring off the face in front, is again in great favor. This is easily understood, as no more universally becoming shape has ever been designed for dress wear.

For evening there are more frivolous hats composed of satins, brocades or metal cloths. A chic little model of black satin, has a flat, turned-up front braided in silver and a black lace veil drooping in piquant fashion about the face and ending in a cascade at the right side.

A gold cloth turban in basket weave effect is smart with its feather fancy adroitly placed at the side.

Beaver hats in tailored styles are much favored. Besides the correct sailors, elegant afternoon models are being shown. One of them is trimmed in an imposing feather ornament directly in front and is turned up at just the right angle at the side.

Velours hats for sports wear may be had in becoming shades of tan, some with youthfully wide brims and an appearance of studied carelessness which is most fashionable.

A smartly different little black felt turns up in back and down in front and has the oddest possible ornament—a pair of silvered turkey claws!

The evening mode is very gorgeous. It offers freest play to the imagination of the designer and results in gowns on many different types, from girlish bouffant lines to stately creations of metal cloths.

Clouds of peach-colored tulle float about a delectable dancing frock. Built over peach satin, the shoulders gleam through a berth of heavy silver lace, and milk fur edges both dress and scarf. The tulle skirt reveals a touch of blue beneath and ends in a huge diaphanous bow at the side. It is an importation, of course.

Bordered With Fur.

Splendidly regal in its heavy gold fillet lace, another dinner gown challenges attention. It is designed on tunic lines, bordered with fur, and belted with a plaited cord of gold. In keeping with the shimmering richness of the gown is its midnight blue agate buckle, inlaid in rhinestones.

A simpler dance frock of cherry-colored crepe-back satin is offered in straight lines, the skirt cut in three tiers, which the banded with the dull side of the material and caught at the side with two large roses.

A gown of shining silver lace exploits the new circular flare by means of godets inserted about the skirt. It is a glittering example of the evening mode, but without that gaudiness which offends good taste. Only the master designer could have created a model of such simplicity and style. The gown is entirely of the silver lace with clusters of corn-flower blue and yellow flowers at the right shoulder and left hip. The stems of the flowers, in silver, trail down the side as far as the hem.

The most important rival of metal cloth for evening gowns this season is velvet. Being an exquisitely supple material, it lends itself to many uses and is unsurpassed for formal dinner gowns. Relying on beauty of material for striking effects, the velvet models which the shops are showing are extremely simple in design.

There is one charming model in a shade of mauve velvet, gathered in at the right side by a design of rhinestone beading.

Bengaline is a much favored silk this season. So many years have elapsed since grandmother's Sunday dress was made of it, that many have forgotten all about it and hail it as a newcomer in the list of materials. However, history repeats itself and so does bengaline, and we have it in all manner of the smartest frocks for afternoon as well as street wear.

Explaining History of Dress.

If one could only know the origin of all the many words we use in our daily talk, one would know much of the history of dress. Many of our most recently adopted clothes words come from France, but five hundred years ago dress terms more usually came from Italy, then the mecca of fashion. Hence, velvet came from "velluto," the Italian word to indicate shaggy. And "comesole," which has recently been revived from an earlier English usage, came from the Italian diminutive of chemise.

How They Breathe Under Ice.

The ability of a beaver to remain under water for a long time is really not so strange a problem as it looks. When a lake or pond is frozen over a beaver will come to the under surface of the ice to expel breath, so that it forms a wide flat bubble. The air coming in contact with the ice and water is purified, and the beaver breathes it again. This operation he can repeat several times. The otter and muskrat do the same thing.

Securing Life's Joys.

The life that knows no setbacks is rare indeed. Even in fiction and the movies a thread of sadness is woven into the garment of gaiety. But when the story ends or the curtain falls our sighs give way to smiles, for everything turns out happily after all. Let us accept what comes and be brave and cheerful. Life holds out golden joys to each one of us, but if we do our part to secure them we should not blame fate or circumstances for the showing that we make.

Ancients Made Bricks to Last.

In the British museum are bricks taken from the buildings in Nineveh and Babylon, which show no signs of decay or disintegration, although the ancients did not burn or bake them, but dried them in the sun.

NEW FACTS ABOUT ANCIENT AMERICA

Pre-Columbian Apartment House Yields Store.

Washington, D. C.—Neil M. Judd, leader of the National Geographic society's expedition to Pueblo Bonito, the pre-Columbian "apartment house" of Chaco canyon, New Mexico, has brought back to Washington an amazing array of exquisite art objects and domestic utensils which shed new light on an early metropolis of Indian America.

Perhaps the most beautiful piece in the collection is a turquoise necklace of 2,500 pieces and four pendants—the only complete specimen of such a necklace known. The method by which the Indians ground down the tiny pieces, and bored them out to be strung on sinews, has won the admiration of modern jewelers who have seen it. The four pendants are remarkable specimens of turquoise, deep blue, and with them, Mr. Judd said, he could have purchased every Indian horse in San Juan county.

Jewels Mounted With Pine Gum. Other unique objects of art are jet rings, perfectly rounded, on which are mounted tiny carved turquoise birds. The mounting was done with pine gum, the adhesive of the American ancients, which lasted through the ages the rings lay buried in the pueblo ruins.

To get these, and other tiny pieces, the geographic explorers have sifted tons of debris, after building a miniature railroad, and set mule-drawn steel dump cars to work hauling out the rubbish.

Recovered by this tedious process are some of the closest woven and finest specimens of Indian basketry yet discovered. To preserve these required the utmost dexterity, for often upon exposure a zephyrlike breeze would dissipate the specimens. The hope of preserving them lay in waxing them immediately upon their exposure.

Historically one of the important finds is a double basket, the like of which has hitherto been unknown in ruins other than cliff dwellings, and the use of which has not yet been determined. It may furnish another clue to place out further the habits, customs and religious beliefs of these aborigines. Although they left no written words, nor even any pictograph records that can be deciphered, they attained a civilization as interesting as the early cultures along the Nile and in Mesopotamia, yet distinctive from all Old World peoples. Already the daily life of the Bonito dwellers has been pieced out patiently in great detail.

Rouge Still Intact. "That object looks like a 'vanity box,'" remarked one geographer who viewed the collections.

"Not only that, but here is a bit of the rouge the Bonitans used," replied Mr. Judd, and he displayed a lump of reddish clay, which still will color the flesh. These "makeup" devices were used by the Bonitan men, however, rather than their women, and they served principally for the beautification of participants in their dramatic religious ceremonies.

Pipes also are in the collection. Some of these were "pleasure pipes" resembling very much the short, large-bowl English models. Others resemble cigar holders, with flaring bowls, and these were used to "make clouds" in the Bonitan's kivas or worship chambers.

Objects which shed light on the economic habits of the Bonitans are the flint knives, with jet and turquoise inlays, used to remove flesh from the skins of animals; flint knives, which are chipped down with infinite skill and patience; and bone needles, used in sewing skins.

The broad area of communication of these ancient peoples is disclosed by objects found in their "apartments" which were brought from points as distant as the Pacific coast and the valley of Mexico.

Woman 100 Years Old Does Own Housework

Grand Ledge, Mich.—"I came to have glasses fitted, not my age," Mrs. Adella D. Pickens, one hundred years old, told an optometrist recently when she came here from her home near Vermontville to get new glasses.

"I'm too busy to think about my age," she said, "but I want the glasses to read with in my spare moments when I'm not busy with housework."

Mrs. Pickens lives with her only remaining child, a bachelor son, and she does all her own housework. She has had five children. Recently she decided it was cheaper to buy bread than bake it, but feared her friends would think she was getting lazy if she didn't bake, so she continued to make her own, and it's mighty good bread, too, her neighbors say. Her active life has kept wrinkles away and she does not appear more than sixty years old.

She has been a widow since 1861, when her husband went to Kentucky to get a sick brother and himself fell sick and died.

"Barracks-Room Language" Plea Aids British Soldier

London.—British military law recognizes the fact that soldiers are able to outbursts of profanity, an when a private of the First royal dragoons was charged at an Alderhot court-martial recently with using subordinate language toward a sergeant, he was acquitted on the ground that the expression he used was common barracks-room language.

Masculine Protest

Aunt Callie left her twins with Sonny's mother while she went to shop. Sonny was having great fun running his auto back and forth over the kitchen floor, when mother told him he must put the car away and play with something else, as he was making too much noise, and would waken the babies. Sonny obeyed, pouting, and mother went on with her work.

Aunt Callie finally returned and saw Sonny lying on the floor with his head on his arm.

"What's the matter, Sonny?" she asked, as she noticed great tears rolling down his cheeks.

"Well, I just don't like this baby business," he sobbed.—Chicago Tribune.

Health for Busy Men

I am going to buy a car and drive it to business so I will get some exercise. I figure the bracing three-mile walk from a parking place to the office is just what my system needs. It is evident that I am overeating. Starting tomorrow, I am going to lunch in the most expensive places. That is really the most convenient and cheapest way to take off weight. The doctor says I need more sleep, but I am afraid that will have to wait. Our company is putting up a new building so we can have some more vice presidents with private offices, but it won't be done till next year.—Life.

Supple Pelts for Paris' Fur Wraps

Caracul, Astrakhan, Mink and Barunduki in Lead; Brown Is Popular.

No dissertation on furs is ever complete unless it contains some reference to the fact that the fur coat is something more than an ornamental luxury—that it is a decidedly utilitarian article and over a period of years may even develop into an economical acquisition. Constant repetition of this thesis, writes a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Herald, has borne fruit in recent years, and the fur wrap, which once graced only the shoulders of the affluent few, is today a conventional part of the moderately income wardrobe. Even the prevalence of fur trimmings on cloth coats and dresses has not sated the steadily increasing feminine appetite for the all-fur cloak.

The popularizing of this essential item of the winter outfit has subjected it to the whims of the mode. It was not always so. In the not so distant past, the fur coat was distinguished per se—the mere fact that a coat was fashioned from some fine pelt overshadowed all other considerations. It mattered not whether the wrap was long or short and there was no set dicta concerning the kind of fur or its color. Only its silhouette conformed—and that somewhat vaguely—to the mandate of the mode.

The present situation is entirely different. Coats of mink, seal, ermine, chinchilla and even sable are no longer epochal acquisitions, and the chic of the fur cloak is quite as dependent upon style as it is upon fabric—a natural consequence of the widening vogue for this type of dress. Choose Flaring Model.

The most difficult problem—if you are contemplating the acquisition of a new fur wrap this winter—is to decide upon the silhouette. Paris has enthusiastically risen to accept the flared outline in every type of costume this winter, but there is admittedly a wide divergence of opinion concerning the lines of the fur coat.

The potency of the widened knee and hemline as a factor for this winter and next spring is unquestioned, but the hesitancy of the fourreur in adapting this innovation is due to the fact that the average woman expects her fur coat to conform to the fashions of more than a single year. As a consequence, the models offered are mixed—some are straight, some are moderately flaring and some show a strikingly distended effect beginning at either the knee or the hem.

as well to the dictates of fashion during the winter of 1925.

The manner of achieving the fur coat flare is quite different from the methods employed on dresses. The godet—of paramount importance with cloth models—is conspicuously missing. The effect is frequently arrived at by merely cutting the coat slightly wider toward the bottom at the front. The coat may then be held by the wearer so as to create the impression of a straight line from shoulder to hem, or it may be permitted to hang in its natural position, in which case the flare becomes apparent. For the lady who still is skeptical over the future of the wider silhouette, the flaring flounce or peplum types are suggested, as from either of these models a change back to the straight-line can be accomplished with comparatively little remodeling and without a great deal of expense.

Considering next the actual pelts, their most significant characteristic is suppleness and this has encouraged ensemble costumes which are based on fur as a keynote. In some instances there is a fur coat and a dress partly of fur and partly of silk or wool, while in others a fur-trimmed coat of fabric will have an accompanying dress in which an almost full-length tunic is developed entirely of fur while the underslip, which shows for only a few inches at the hemline, is of fabric. In this case the coat of the ensemble is full length. Another kind of fur ensemble consists of a knee-length coat of fur and an accompanying dress of cloth bordered with a deep band of fur to match the cape. This band is of a depth that reaches to where the cape ends. The effect is that of an entire fur garment. The cape is lined with cloth in the same color as that of the dress and narrow fur cuffs finish the long, tight sleeves.

Dress and Coat, Black Cloth.

With a costume consisting of a dress and coat developed from black cloth, the latter having a high-standing collar and deep cuffs of summer ermine, there is an accompanying tunic, developed from the ermine, which is detached from the remainder of the dress. On blistering days this tunic may be worn, while it may be discarded when the temperature is mild. This is a very practical idea and one which will no doubt meet with considerable favor on this side of the Atlantic—it has already attained popularity in Paris.

Another striking ensemble model combines two different furs. The coat is three-quarters length and developed from black broadtail while the dress is of black satin edged with lynx and embroidered in pearls.

New names and familiar names are met among the pelts of the present season. Sable, ermine and chinchilla remain the triumphs of the evening mode while mink is a dominating factor for occasions du jour and du soir. Astrakhan, because of its pliable texture, is one of the most important daytime pelts. Other modish skins include barunduki, or chipmunk, leopard, pony-skin—its first appearance in several years—caracul, broadtail, seal, mole, squirrel and gazelle. Raccoon, of course, still retains its collegiate appeal.

A straightline model of barunduki is cut on perfectly straight lines as far as the silhouette is concerned, but a slightly flaring effect is achieved by the trimming consisting of bands of monkey fur which flare out when the wearer walks. Collar and cuffs are of monkey. Surplice closing and low waistline are important features.

Brown is the smartest color for the Paris furs and even those skins that are naturally of a different hue are being dyed all tints of brown, ranging from beige to the more decided shades. The finer pelts invariably retain their natural colors and the dyeing process is confined to the more inexpensive skins.

The length of the new models varies from three-quarters to full, and includes, of course, the seven-eighths coats. The short fur jacket has been comparatively neglected this year—only Premet makes a genuine feature of it and even with this designer the longer types easily predominate.

HERO KEEPS TO MOUNTAIN HOME

Willie Sandlin Modest, but Bravery in War Won Him Many Medals.

Lexington, Ky.—Kentucky has the most modest hero of the World war.

She also has the "heroest hero" of the same war in the selfsame individual and her claim to this distinction is attested by General Pershing and Marshal Foch.

The hero—he accumulated enough glory in one day to chalk off all the valorous deeds of most heroes and have enough left for ordinary citation purposes—hails from a section of Kentucky noted for fighters, and its very name is enough to throw a man's size scare into a timid chap.

Kentucky's star hero is Sergt. Willie Sandlin, from Devil's Jump Branch, Hell-fer-Sartin Creek, Leslie county, and he looks the part, with a wiry frame, determined jaw and keen eye, fearless as a fighter, but extremely shy at all attempts to exploit his deeds.

Willie—not a nickname but a full-fledged monicker found quite generally among the "Williams" of the Kentucky hills—was induced to come to Lexington for the Fourth of July celebration as the honored guest of Hugh McKee post, No. 677, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and was introduced by R. E. Lee Murphy, state commander.

Lost a Medal.
Mr. Murphy had considerable difficulty in introducing the modest hero, as Sergeant Sandlin had long since the war misplaced his citations and lost one of his medals bestowed by a foreign government. However, he still had the Congressional Medal of Honor—his own country's highest decoration—Medal Militaire from France and Croix de Guerre with palm, Italian War cross and decoration from Montenegro.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars elected him to membership in that organization for 20 years without payment of dues, with the promise that his membership would be renewed at the expiration of that time "if he lived longer than 20 years on the $10 a month allowed him by the veterans' bureau for the support of his wife, two children and himself."

In September Hugh McKee post will take him to Atlantic City to attend the national encampment if he can be induced to forsake his beloved Kentucky hills for a few days and face a barrage of admiring eyes at the national convention of foreign war veterans.

Sandlin's Citation.
Willie Sandlin's citation, though misplaced by a boy who has no taste for "heroing," is of record and, as issued by General Pershing, reads:

"Sergt. Willie Sandlin (2,078,108), Company A, One Hundred and Thirty-second Infantry. For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty in action with the enemy at Bois de Forges, France, September 26, 1918.

"Sergeant Sandlin showed conspicuous gallantry in action at Bois de Forges, France, on September 26, by advancing alone directly on a machine gun nest which was holding up the line with its fire.

"He killed the crew with a grenade and enabled the line to advance. Later in the day Sergeant Sandlin attacked alone and put out of action two other machine gun nests, setting a splendid example of bravery and coolness to his men."

The French citation from Marshal Foch, dated April 13, 1919, is the same in substance.

Military citations are terse. The two short paragraphs gave a condensed recital of one of the most thrilling chapters in history—the enactment and re-enactment of a single-handed charge upon six deadly machine gun nests that probably has no parallel in the annals of war.

Sandlin Advances.
Here is the story as it happened in one day:

The general advance was on. Six divisions were participating. Sandlin was in command of a platoon.

About 7 o'clock in the morning the advance was checked by a hot fire from a machine gun nest. An order to halt and lie down came along the line. Sandlin's men heard it and obeyed. Sandlin did not. He advanced directly on the machine gun nest, and at thirty yards threw a grenade. Three others followed and he then jumped into the pit. Three of the eight men were alive and gave battle. Sandlin killed all of them with his bayonet.

The line came up and Sandlin resumed command of his men. Half an hour later machine gun fire again caused the order to halt. Sandlin did not. He rushed this nest as he had the other, employing the same tactics. This time when his grenades were all spent there were four men still defending the nest. Another single-handed battle—and they were all dead, except Sandlin, when the line came up.

The third nest encountered was not reached until 2 o'clock. Just as before, Sandlin advanced upon it. His grenades in this instance wounded every man in the pit, but he had to dispatch two who still gave fight, as well as the others whose wounds had not proved immediately fatal.

Later that day Sergeant Sandlin participated in taking the strong point, which was German battalion headquarters. Many were in at this affair and there was no individual credit given.

To finish out the day Sandlin captured a hospital group and killed the lieutenant with the latter's own gun, which he wrested from him in a hand-to-hand fight. This pistol, a Luger, he has as a souvenir.

Among his trophies is a diploma taken from a German doctor whom he captured and "a few other tricks" that he brought home for the children to play with.

Enlisted From Breathitt.

He enlisted from Breathitt county, the only county in the United States where it was not necessary to draft men. He was gassed and wounded twice, once between the eyes with a grenade and once in the right leg with shrapnel.

In 1920 he was honored by the government with appointment to return to Europe on the graves registration service, and upon his return six months later was taken on a tour of eastern Kentucky by the state illiteracy commission. On the latter trip Sandlin urged his countrymen in the hills to raise the standard of education, pointing to his failure to secure a commission on account of lack of education.

Willie Sandlin loves the mountains of Kentucky. His Fourth of July speech in Lexington, quoted almost verbatim, proves it: "I am glad to be here. I thank you for your hospitality. When I was on the fields of France my heart was in the hills of Kentucky. I will now step aside and let you hear the real speakers."

Sandlin's speech was the shortest and the applause the longest on the day's program of Fourth of July orations.

He left the speakers' stand frequently during the exercises to dodge admiring eyes. When the speaking was over, he was urged to stay a week as the guest of the Foreign Wars Veterans, but he said: "Where's my grip? I must get back to the hills," and there he will remain until some influence causes him to leave his base temporarily. And it will not be the "hero business," as he is not built that way.

Mars Is Cool Spot,
Scientists Declare

Cambridge, Mass.—The average temperature on the surface of Mars, except near the poles, is not unlike that of a bright, cool day on the surface of the earth. It was disclosed here at the annual meeting of the National Academy of Sciences.

In a paper read before the meeting, embodying observations made at Flagstaff, Ariz., last summer when Mars was nearest the earth, it was stated that the surface temperatures on Mars run from 5 to 15 degrees centigrade, or between 40 and 60 degrees Fahrenheit.

Measurements, the results of which were presented, were made on 24 nights by W. W. Coblentz of the bureau of standards, Washington, and C. O. Lampland of the Lowell observatory at Flagstaff, working with a new "thermocouple radiometer," an instrument capable of delicate measurements.

The brighter portions of Mars are cooler than the dark regions, the observations showed. Temperatures in the polar regions fall as low as approximately minus 70 degrees, centigrade—about 94 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit.

Temperatures of the dark phase of the sunrise side of the planet are also very low, probably reaching, it was said, about minus 60 degrees centigrade.

Parts of Petrified Giant
Picked Up in Missouri

Carthage, Mo.—Residents of Brandsville are much interested in the recent discovery of what seems to be parts of a petrified giant, and what is believed probably will give archeologists an interesting study of the prehistoric race which at one time inhabited the Ozarks. Many traces of the prehistoric race recently have been found in other sections of the Ozarks, and it is believed the petrified body of the giant found at Brandsville probably was thrown up by volcanic eruption, which severed the body into the pieces which are now being gathered together. The rocks were found on the farm of B. E. King, late of Elsinore, Mo., in a timber patch one and one-half miles southeast of Brandsville. West Plains physicians who examined the rocks state that the muscles and blood vessels are plainly outlined on the parts which are thought undoubtedly to be the petrified thighs and forearms of a man of giant stature. Ball and socket joints, thought to be the shoulders of the man, also have been found.

Near Species of Potato
Found in Alaskan Island

Seattle, Wash.—A wild potato, which it is believed may develop into an Alaskan product of great commercial importance, was discovered last summer growing on the Diomedes islands, Bering sea, by L. J. Palmer of the biological survey.

Specimens brought here are real tubers, more spherical than Irish potatoes, with indented eyes, and about the size of baseballs. These tubers are dug out of the ground after growing in the wild state and used extensively as food by the natives of the Diomedes.

The Department of Agriculture shortly will receive collections of the wild tubers for study and classification. During next summer experiments are planned at agricultural stations at Chena and Kodiak, Alaska, for its propagation. The islanders eat the tubers raw, baked and boiled and make the mashed pulp into a sort of bread.

line. All of these are en regle this season and the responsibility for selecting the silhouette which shall be equally modish next season rests entirely with madame. Nor is her dilemma solved by settling upon the most attractive type, although that is obviously an important consideration.

The first outline to be eliminated in the quest for the new fur coat is the strictly straightline model, which is clearly nearing the end of its cycle. Little exposition is needed on this point. Straight simplicity has served its purpose and seen its day, and while the effect of the new silhouette may not be radically different, it will nevertheless vary enough in concept to force the old outline out of the picture.

The extremely flared treatment should also be avoided. While such a silhouette will very probably be adopted during 1925 for dresses, an exaggerated wide hemline is always awkward in coats and particularly inelegant in fur coats.

Distended Effects Differ.

This leaves only the moderately distended silhouette, which is patent, the most practical outline to select for this season's fur coat. It is distinct from the models of recent winters and although the flare is very evident, it does not interfere with the necessarily graceful lines of coat or wrap. It conforms to the present trend of the mode and it will conform

The Hissing Iguana

In the Pacific ocean, about 500 miles off the coast of Ecuador, lies a group of desert volcanic islands, known as the Galapagos archipelago. Here, among many creatures that have never heard the voice of man, says London Tit-Bits, the dominant sound of life is the hiss of the sea iguana, a giant marine lizard that exists nowhere else in the world.

Darwin visited four of the islands in 1835 and found wonderful material for his "Origin of Species." The great marine iguana grows to a length of four feet and looks like its prehistoric ancestors, some of which were 80 feet long.

It lives about the seashore and feeds on seaweeds. At night it sleeps in a burrow of the earth or in a lava crevice, while in the daytime it comes out and at low tide makes its way to the edge of the surf to feed. It will not live in captivity.

HARTMAN THEATER

The only inimitable De Wolf Hopper will open a three day engagement at the Hartman theater, Columbus, starting next Monday night, January 5, with a matinee on Wednesday presenting the ever popular Gilbert and Sullivan operas, "The Mikado" and "H. H. S. Pinafore." Mr. Hopper comes to Columbus surrounded by a company which, with a few unimportant exceptions, remains the same as when it was formed over three years ago, since which time it has been playing almost continuously. Although almost forty years have passed since the Gilbert and Sullivan operas were first given to the public, their reception wherever Mr. Hopper has presented them has proved beyond a doubt that their immense popularity has not been diminished by their passing into middle age.

The two operas chosen for presentation in Columbus were selected only after the desire of many local music lovers had been consulted. In these days of too much jazz, it should prove a welcome relief to again hear "The Flowers That Bloom in the Spring," "A Wandering Minstrel," "Taken from the County Jail," "Three Little Maids From School," "Titwillow" and others in "The Mikado" and a dozen or more excellent numbers in "Pinafore."

A feature is a singing chorus of thirty selected voices. In "The Mikado" which will be presented on Monday and Tuesday nights Mr. Hopper will be seen as "Koko" and in "H. H. S. Pinafore" which will be given on Wednesday matinee and night, he will be seen as "Dick Deadeye." Between acts of "Pinafore," Mr. Hopper will recite "Casey at the Bat." Complete productions of both operas are carried. Mail orders are being received now.

Improvement of Dairy Animals

Brought About at Low Cost Through the Medium of Bull Associations.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Herds of dairy cattle in many parts of the country are being improved at a minimum of cost for high-class sires through the medium of bull associations encouraged by the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agricultural colleges. Not only have these associations made it possible for farmers with small herds to obtain the services of sires with high production ancestry, but they have stimulated them to adopt better dairying methods and to improve their equipment.

Expense is Low.

That the expense of securing good bulls is often surprisingly low has been shown in the Douglas county (Minn.) Guernsey Bull association, one of the oldest organizations of the kind in the country, having been formed in 1910. In one of the blocks of this association, known as the Schellin block, the total expenditure for bulls from the beginning up to and including 1923 has been $456.85. From the beginning there have been seven members in this block, and consequently the total cost to each member, exclusive of maintenance of the bulls, has been $65.26, or the small sum of $4.66 a year. In this cost is included $1 a year membership fee since 1917.

A recent report from one of these associations in the Mesilla valley, N. Mex., indicates how some of them advertise the good qualities of their bulls by exhibiting them at shows. One of their bulls was first in his class and grand champion at the International fair, El Paso, Texas; and a yearling was given second place in his class. A new association formed at Spokane, Wash., has decided that no bulls will be purchased whose dams have production records of less than 600 pounds of fat in a year.

Safe-Keeper Pens.

An indication of the influence an association may have on the improvement of equipment comes from Farmington, Utah. This 11-block association has provided 10 of the blocks with safe-keeper bull pens, where the animals may be handled with the minimum of danger and where they may be kept in good condition. This new feature has attracted much attention and has helped to advertise the activities of the organization.

Pure Bred Hens Are Sure to Produce More Eggs

Much depends upon the breeding stock. No amount of feed or care can make bogus fowls pay, whereas good stock is pretty sure to properly reward good care and feeding.

The first point is to keep pure breeds instead of scrubs. The pure bred fowl transmits to its progeny its good qualities and the chicks grow up uniform in color, shape and weight.

"Which breed shall I keep?" may be satisfactorily answered by selecting nearly any one of the hundred or more "standard" varieties. Pick the one whose size, shape and color you like best.

After the choice of variety, it is important to pick out the individual hens that are the best layers. The average egg production on American farms is only about 65 eggs per hen per year. The average production from pure bred hens on specialty poultry farms is almost three times this number. The difference represents a good mark for all to shoot at as it is mostly clear gain.

Ventilation of Poultry House Needs Attention

Poultry house ventilation through the winter months is one of the most important items in poultry management. The poultry house must be constructed so as to keep direct draft, rain and snow from getting in over the portion of the house where the hens are roosting. At the same time, all damp air which is being continually given off by the fowls must be removed, because it is the damp, cold air which causes roup and the freezing of the combs and wattles.

Chickens have a very high body temperature and will never be affected by cold weather as long as the air is dry. In putting the hens into the poultry house, maximum egg production cannot be expected unless the higher breeds of chickens are given approximately 2.5 square feet per bird or 3 square feet per bird for the heavier breeds.

Laying Hens Must Have Well-Balanced Ration

Every farmer or poultryman knows that egg production is in direct proportion to feeding. Feed right, and the hens—if they be the laying kind—will lay right.

One of the common mistakes is the feeding of whole grain—and nothing else. A complete ration for laying hens must contain not only scratch feed or whole grains, but also ground feeds, animal protein, green feed, mineral feed and water.

To omit any of these necessary ingredients is to lower production. Open range will permit hens to pick up a variety of feeds for themselves, but even then, they should not be left entirely to good fortune in "netting."

Ellen's Great Temptation

By MARTHA WILLIAMS

(Copyright.)

ELLEN, picking blackberries from the hedgerow, felt weariness of all things in her daily round. She wished not for things, but wings—they would take her high and far. Nineteen, slim, lithe, and tough as a hickory sapling, a sure shot, no matter what the weapon, reckless rider, knowing and loving fields, woods, hills and waters, what was there to fear? Men, granny said. Ellen had laughed at that; she could more than hold her own with the best of them—or the worst. Brush Creek to a man admitted the fact—with reservations. "Ellen March had better look out! She's a female, in spite of being so owdacious," said Sister Maul, the minister's wife, through pursed lips. The Missionary society nodded assent, but whispered aside, behind its collective hands, that she would never forgive the ducking Johnny Maul had got at the fishing party for trying to kiss Ellen as "fisher's right" for catching the biggest trout.

Ellen smiled impishly as Johnny came riding down the lane. She was bare-headed, filling her straw hat with big dead-berry berries, now that basket and bucket overflowed. Johnny stormed at her: "Here you; take my hat! Put it on, I tell you!" with the last word sending a bigger straw sailing across the hedgerow to light almost on her head. Next second it sailed back to him, with better aim, taking him full-face and poising solidly over the bulging forehead. Smothering an oath, he raised both hands to it. As the reins fell loose, a fly stung the black colt he had under saddle. Instantly the creature set teeth on the bit, bolted, and ran his best. Ellen laughed to see it, but went on with her picking.

Halfway across the old field she meant to rest under the big walnut, but recoiled suddenly from its welcome shade as Clem Sheldrake sprang up crying: "Just the girl I want to see—most and worst. What good wind blew you?"

"When did you go blind?" Ellen asked pointedly.

"You do look fit to drop," Clem said solicitously. "Rest awhile—then I'll carry the load for you—at least as far as the stile."

"I see! You can learn some things," Ellen retorted, "but not all. Anybody told you about dad's new rifle? It shoots a long way further'n the big gate. Moreover, my old parent is mighty hard-headed; when he told you not to pester anything belongin' to him, he meant it—every word."

"Do I pester you?" Sheldrake asked slowly, his voice wonderfully soft, his eyes entreating. "Stop fooling, Ellen. You—we—must! You're my devil—an—I'll have you in spite of the world! Right now! That's what I'm here for. Car out in the woods—it'll take us away from everything—we can be married as soon as we've got a hundred miles behind us—"

"No, no, no!" Ellen interrupted, clutching the laden bucket like a breastplate. "You—you—make me feel—funny. But here I belong; here I stay."

"No! Here you belong! Here you stay!" Sheldrake cried, clutching her and trying to draw her within his arms. She writhed free just in time to see Johnny Maul, bruised and bloody, his nose still dribbling, his coat split up the back, his mop of stiff hair sticky with red clay, all these things proclaiming a violent spill from the back of his runaway steed.

Sheldrake, older, taller, heavier, of almost double strength laughed evilly, caught Johnny about the waist, lifted him head high, intending to slam him down on the turf, breathless and senseless.

Ellen made a lightning whirl, swinging the bucket at arm's end, its contents falling out and blotching the turf yet enough remaining to weight it like a club. It took Sheldrake fair on the side of the head. He staggered, dropped his prey, and rushed at Ellen, swearing great oaths. Luck was against him; his right foot landed in the barrel of berries which, crushing under his weight, made him slip, slide, try vainly to recover, then fall sprawling.

Even then he might have escaped but for Ellen's police dog, Donnerwetter, who, scenting her across the pasture, had come dashing to meet and welcome her. Don was at once the gentlest and the savagest of things four-footed. Ellen waved her hand, saying, "Hold," and straightway he was at Sheldrake's throat, ready to murder him if he stirred. Ellen looked at the pair, her lips quivering, then at Johnny, spent, bloody, disconsolate, in tatters, and uglier than home-made sin. Her heart warmed to him—for her sake and manhood's he had tried against odds to do a man's part. Fine indeed, of him, but not fine enough quite to make him her proper mate.

She said huskily to Sheldrake: "Don will kill you at a nod from me. He will get the nod unless you promise to go—right away—and never come back."

Sheldrake covered his eyes as he groaned: "I promise." Don followed him to the lane, then came sedately back to see Johnny slaking his thirst with juicy blackberries, and hear Ellen say kindly: "Lie here and rest till dad comes to take you home."

Mrs. Bob Wyeth, born March, told her husband in strict confidence that only her conscience saved her from marrying Johnny Maul—such a triumph over his mother was a temptation mighty hard to resist.

Artificial Eye.

During the year 1840 Professor Boissoneau of France created what could honestly be called an eye that was human in appearance. The method of manufacturing was practically the same as that employed at the present time, with the exception that in the intervening years great improvements have been made in imitating the colors, that are almost lifelike in their effect. Besides, many improvements have been made in the shapes, which are practically molded to conform to the socket and fill all the available space.

Has Used Over 200 Bottles in Nine Years.

Grove City, September 6, 1924.

Mr. F. L. Fickardt

Circleville, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Fickardt:—

Perhaps you do not remember the incident but about nine years ago I tried out Fickardt's Roup and Cholera Drops to satisfy in my own mind the truth of the statements I had heard.

I took two equal number of birds in exactly the same condition and tried out your Drops as against another Nationally advertised poultry remedy. I used both as the directions stated until I thoroly satisfied myself that Fickardt's Roup and Cholera Drops were superior for the use that it is intended. Since I convinced myself that Fickardt's Roup and Cholera Drops were the best, I have used it exclusively on all my poultry and in all that time I have never had an epidemic of any kind. I firmly believe this is due to keeping your remedy before them all the time.

I know that I have returned more than two hundred empty bottles, but how many more I bought I can't tell. Altho you do not make any claim for your remedy as an egg producer I can because I get more eggs now that I did before I used Fickardt's Roup and Cholera Drops. This is probably due to the fact that my chickens are always in first class condition.

My eggs and butter pay our household expenses. I would not undertake to raise poultry without Fickardt's medicine.

Sincerely,

Mrs. John R. Shelton

Maize Grown in China. Indian corn, or maize, is grown extensively throughout the entire section of China. It is generally planted after the wheat is harvested and in fields with beans, the beans ripening after the corn is harvested. The lack of scientific seed selection prevents the production of as large a yield as would otherwise be obtained.

POULTRY EPIDEMIC

Produce Dealers in the Large Cities Are Heavy Losers.

The European poultry epidemic that has struck the feathered tribe in Chicago and New York City seems to have gained a foothold in this state. Several farmers west of the river report that they have lost a number of chickens, that to all appearances have died of the same disease that killed thousands of birds in the hands of produce shippers in the larger cities.

The chickens have a droopy appearance, their legs become weak and they are dead the third day after becoming infected. When any chickens show a sign of this disease take them at once and either burn or bury the out of the flock, kill the infected birds carcasses deep, is the advice of state poultry authorities. If you do not follow this advice you will probably lose your whole flock. The disease is epidemic and spreads rapidly. In some instances it has decimated an entire flock before the cause is discovered.

First Millionaire.

Stephen Girard of Philadelphia, who lived from 1750 to 1831, was one of the first, if not the first, millionaire in this country. He began as a sailor, became a merchant, shipowner and banker, and at his death left $6,000,000 to found the Girard college, as well as other large benefactions. John Jacob Astor, who established the Astor fortunes by fur trading and land speculation, lived from 1762 to 1848, during which time he amassed about $30,000,000.

Correspondents of United States
Press Association.

Columbus, Jan. 5: (United Press.)—Two bandits today held up A. H. Kiskar, manager of a Kroger grocery and escaped in an auto with $140 in cash.

Columbus, Jan. 5:—County Prosecutor John R. King today announced that he would present evidence in the death in the Lutheran parsonage furnace of Mrs. Addie Sheatsley, pastor's wife, to county grand jury meeting in Columbus today.

Harvey M. Tittle, assistant postmaster of Springfield, was officially suspended from office Saturday and returned home to await development in the departmental shakeup in Washington which resulted in five other suspensions in other American cities.

Tittle denies the charge that he is a party to a money passing system in connection with pending postal pay legislation.

The January grand jury convened today and reported for duty to Judge Curtin. Fred L. Pickardt was appointed foreman.

Prosecuting Attorney Meeker Terwilliger subpoenaed forty-five witnesses. Thirteen transcripts from justices and the mayor's court are in the hopper.

Certificate of Indebtedness.

Administrator Appointed

Walter S. Parker was appointed administrator of the estate of the late Samuel Parker. The estate is estimated to be worth $15,000, of which $5,000 is personal.

TRAIL

CHANGING CUSTOMS

I HAVE seen a good many statements within the last few months to the effect that our young people are degenerating, that the moral standards of girls especially are lower than they were, and that youth is going to the dogs generally. I have seen as many young people as the next man, and I don't believe it.

It is simply that girls are more frank than they were a generation ago; they are more open, they conceal less—they, in fact, conceal very little, either physical or emotional. The older generation of women may have had a good many questionable things go through their minds, but they were discreet; they thought under the cover of darkness; they seldom gave anything away.

In our grandmothers' day the mysteries of life were never discussed; they were not nice. The privacies of the feminine toilet were inviolate and beyond the knowledge and the experience of man. Things are different now.

In a public restaurant early one morning not long ago, while waiting for a train, I sat near a young girl and her fiancé, as I gathered from the conversation that drifted to me. She was a pretty girl, tastefully gowned. Her voice was soft and her speech correct and refined. It was early morning, as I have said, and she was to take a train, as I was. She had had none too much time, I presume, for arraying herself properly.

The male member of the combination, true to type, addressed himself pretty completely to his bacon and the morning paper. The young woman, having finished her coffee, turned her attention to her toilet.

From a bag of tools, which all careful young women now carry with them wherever they go, she got out the paraphernalia for putting her nails into condition. There is nothing more irritating than a dangling hang-nail. Then the lip-stick was generously applied and the edges of the rouge blotch on her powdered cheek softened a little.

I should not have been surprised or shocked—nor would her companion, I think—if she had given her teeth the once over, and screwed on a pair of earrings, or adjusted a transformation dragged from the recesses of her tool box. But her friend had finished his breakfast at this stage of the proceedings and she had no time for further details. As I said, I don't believe that young people innately are particularly different from what they were in our grandmothers' time. It is just that customs are changing.

So They Couldn't Get Away.

In old times, when the men kissed, each took hold of the other's beard during the operation.

DELHI SOON TO BE INDIA'S CAPITAL

First of the New Buildings Is Nearing Completion.

London.—Despite unforeseen obstacles and many delays incident to the great war, the work of rearing the new Indian capital at Delhi has gone steadily on.

Latest reports to the Indian office indicate the first of the new buildings will be occupied by the end of next year.

Thus will be realized one of the greatest building achievements of modern times.

The new Indian capital is rising from a desolate and barren waste. The present English king, as emperor, at his coronation durbar in 1912, announced the decision to transfer the capital of India from Calcutta to Delhi—not the old city of that name, but a reclaimed desert outside and beyond the older settlement.

It was in 1913 that the town planning committee reported in favor of the so-called Raisini site, beyond old Delhi. Although the intervening years of war and reconstruction have doubled the expense of the original project, which will cost at least $45,000,000 and many more millions in years to come, the work has never once been suspended since it was started.

The principal architect of the new Delhi is Sir Edwin Lutyens. Associated with Sir Edwin is Herbert Baker and a score of less famous architects.

The government house, the central building of the whole scheme, will contain, among other official quarters, the state residence of the viceroy. It is now promised that this building will be ready for occupancy late in 1926.

Sir Edwin Lutyens and his associates are engaged in a work not unlike that which Major L'Enfant achieved in laying out the city of Washington. Each was given the task of preparing plans for a city to be built from the very beginning. In the scheme for the Indian capital, the government house will occupy a pivotal position in the municipality not unlike that which the capitol holds in Washington.

The parliament buildings at Delhi will be less ambitious. Present expectations are that they will be ready for occupancy early in 1926.

English of Future to Mix
Cockney and Scotch

London.—English as it will be spoken 500 years from now will not have much in common with the present-day abuses of the language, according to Daniel Jones, professor of phonetics at the University of London. In the far-away future generation Scotchmen will talk like Englishmen, while the general tongue of the highly cultured people will be "super-cockney, with a little Scotch accent."

Professor Jones' idea is that the language of today was cockney to Shakespeare, and that the speech of southern England now is getting nearer to the cockney.

In some places the cockney has already the upper hand, and there is a decided trend in others to adopt the accent in words which contain the letter "a." The wide difference in the dialect of the English provinces accelerates this tendency, the professor says, as the various dialects weaken the common language and destroy its root after a few years.

Within 500 years, Professor Jones predicts, the Gaelic language will have nearly disappeared and the native Irish (Erse) will be heard no more. Of this group of languages only Welsh will remain.

The best example the lecturer knows of the English of the future is to take the word cart and pronounce it "car-r-r-t."

Yank Teachers Dispute
Methods With French

Paris.—The psychology of asking school children questions is a point on which American teachers take issue with most French instructors.

"Jean," says the French teacher in most schools, "stand up!"

Then the question is asked. In American schools the process is reversed. The question is put fully, then some pupil is asked to answer it. "The difference is," said a recent visitor to Paris lycees, "that in the French school the whole class knows instantly that Jean is the one to answer and the rest have no need to do any hard thinking."

"In the American school, every one in the class is compelled to search his wits for an answer, because he or she may be called upon to rise. In that way the whole class answers the question, or tries to, although only one recites."

World's Hottest Place
Found in North Africa

London.—Until recently Death valley, Cal., where a temperature of 134.1 degrees in the shade was registered at Greenland ranch on July 10, 1913, was considered the hottest place on the earth's surface. According to the quarterly journal of the Royal Meteorological society, this record has been broken at the Italian settlement of Azizia, in the semidesert region of North Africa, about twenty-five miles south of Tripoli, where a properly sheltered thermometer rose to 136.4 degrees.

Youthful Saint.

St. Agnes was a Roman virgin, and martyr, who at the age of 13 suffered persecution and was beheaded under Diocletian about the year 304. At Rome there is an annual procession in her honor, when a lamb, highly decorated, is led through the city. The connection of her name with the Latin for lamb—agnus—probably has led to the association of this animal with her memory.

Use Time to Advantage.

Time, which never stands still itself, will not allow any one of us to stand still. It delivers into our hands sixty minutes every hour and compels us to dispose of them in some way. Whether we will or not, a constant accounting has to be rendered. One who falls into the habit of dissipating time dissipates not only opportunity but happiness, for the spendthrift of time becomes a spendthrift of the other things which make life worth while.—Forbes Magazine.

Evidence of Failure.

We frequently find men of culture who take pride in their art or their science but who have no feeling for morality or religion and are rather proud of the fact. Is it not rather an evidence that their culture is failing to raise the possibilities of experience to their highest power?—Minneapolis Journal.

TIMELY ADVICE TO DRIVERS OF AUTOS.

Keep the bus in the garage during accident hours.

Allow only one auto on each street at one time.

Turn corners on wet pavement as fast as possible.

If railroad train is trying to beat you to crossing show the engineer up and give him a good scare by just nicking the cowcatcher of his engine.

Protect telephone poles with cotton batten packing.

Look in gas tank with lighted matches.

When road-hog street car motormen refuse to let you by crash into their fenders; it will make them stop to write out a report.

Equip curbstones with balloon shock absorbers. Step on gas when passing schoolhouses.

Shoot across intersections at forty miles an hour; you'll never get anywhere if you don't take a chance.

Force autos to run in reverse gear; in this way they will always be backing away from danger.

Furnish jazz babies with spiked corsets for one armed drivers to practice on.

Plant rubber trees along highways for rebound parties.

Blow your horn immediately after accident; this will attract attention.

Speed up when old women are stepping from street cars just ahead. You may miss them.

Deepen sewers to empty contents of hip pocket flasks in.

Use soft water under open draw-bridges.

Place nets along mountain road edges.

Hit street cars obliquely instead of head on.

Talk back to traffic cops.

If your car has two wheel brakes get right behind cars with four wheel brakes and try to stop as quickly as they do.

Sell the auto and help the street car company along.
